Graduate Students in the MSU Department of Pharmacology & Toxicology hosted the Halloween Activities. Participants carved pumpkins, made slime, decorated cookies and learned about the bones and how they work as they built a skeleton.

At the Fenner Nature Center participants connect with nature. They take a hike and discover powder mushrooms, insects that live under the dead trees, species of worms and learn about the Osage orange. If placed in the closet the osage orange will keep out spiders.

Inside the center, participants can touch live animals. One is curious about the skeletons and doesn't hesitate to see how a horn would look protruding from his own head. There is always a line to hold the snakes. Looking through the microscope at the smaller insects and their parts piqued the curiosity of this participant.
